Taking a few steps now, while you’re still working, to prepare for your health care costs in retirement can give you more choices down the road.

As health care costs continue to increase faster than the rate of inflation, there are five steps you can take today that will help prepare you to manage those costs when you retire — even if that’s 10 or 20 years away. You can start right now to focus strategically on meeting your future health care needs.

Bill Hunter, director, personal retirement strategies and solutions, Bank of America Merrill Lynch, points to new research to suggest why starting now is critical. “In our May 2014 Age Wave study we found that health care expenses were the top financial concern for older clients, even for the wealthiest retirees and pre-retirees,” says Hunter. “Planning early and strategically to better prepare for health care costs in retirement reduces the odds that younger generations will have to worry as much as their parents did.”

Getting a head start with your planning is critical, Hunter says, because with increased life expectancies, future retirees may face substantial health care expenses. Those costs add up over a 20- to 30-year retirement (see chart, below).

Estimated health care costs for 30 years in retirement

Americans are living longer due to advancements in medicine: The average person can live 30-plus years in retirement.

!Estimated out-of-pocket health care costs if retirement lasts ...

---

Key Points

- Medicare pays only a portion of health care expenses, so you need to factor this into your retirement savings strategy.
- Consider increasing tax-favored 401(k), IRA or Health Savings Account contributions to help cover future health care costs.
- Healthy living and long-term care insurance can help you lower costs and stay independent after you retire.

---

Merrill Lynch is available through Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Incorporated (MLPF&S), and consists of the Merrill Edge Advisory Center™ (investment guidance) and self-directed online investing. MLPF&S is a registered broker-dealer, Member SIPC and a wholly owned subsidiary of Bank of America Corporation. Investment products offered through MLPF&S and insurance and annuity products offered through Merrill Lynch Life Agency Inc.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Are Not FDIC Insured</th>
<th>Are Not Bank Guaranteed</th>
<th>May Lose Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Are Not Deposits</td>
<td>Are Not Insured by Any Federal Government Agency</td>
<td>Are Not a Condition to Any Banking Service or Activity</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Merrill Lynch Life Agency Inc. is a licensed insurance agency and wholly owned subsidiary of Bank of America Corporation. Banking products are provided by Bank of America, N.A., Member FDIC and a wholly owned subsidiary of Bank of America Corporation.
In addition, fewer and fewer employees can count on help from their employers with those costs. More than 25 years ago, two-thirds of large companies offered health benefits to retirees. Today fewer than a third of these companies do.²

That means a moderately healthy 65-year-old paying about $5,100 a year for health care in 2014 could pay close to $10,000 a year at age 75 and more than $24,000 a year by the time he or she reaches age 89 (see chart, below).³

Projected health care expenses with Medicare
Even with the assistance of Medicare, you should plan for substantial out-of-pocket health care costs.

Step 1: Get up to speed on what Medicare will cover and how much you’ll need to pay on your own.
Contrary to popular opinion, Medicare won’t cover all of your medical expenses, nor is it free. In fact, the basic Medicare benefits (Part A and Part B) cover about half of all health care expenses on average. They don’t cover deductibles and co-pays, prescription drugs you take on a regular basis, dental care and dentures, hearing aids and alternative treatments such as acupuncture. They also don’t cover long-term care if you have an illness that prevents you from taking care of yourself.

What health care costs can you expect?
Knowing what Medicare pays for — and what it doesn’t — can help you understand how much you need to plan for in your retirement investing strategy.

Two ways to pay for health care costs in retirement
(Costs and choices vary by state)

Original Medicare
Buy parts separately and choose your own doctor

Medicare Advantage Plans
Buy the packages, like an HMO or PPO; use plan’s doctors

Part A Hospital coverage
Provided free in most cases, but you must pay a deductible and coinsurance

Part B Outpatient coverage
Premiums are deducted from your Social Security payment, and you must pay a deductible and coinsurance*

Supplemental insurance (Medigap)
Premiums vary by policy and company

Part D Rx coverage
You pay premiums and co-pays

As you age, costs can vary widely depending on your health and where you live. That’s why it’s critical for you to understand today what your health care costs might be when you retire — and to begin to plan strategically to manage them. The sooner you start, the greater the impact any changes you make will have on your retirement — and the more health care choices you could have in the future, from the doctors you select to where you can choose to live if you need long-term care.

The steps outlined here — gathered from retirement, financial planning and health care professionals — can help you estimate your future health care costs, enhance your retirement plan and guard against risks.

"Consumers estimating their future Medicare costs focus on premiums and co-payments, but those can be the nickels and dimes," says Katy Votava, Ph.D., founder of GOODCARE.com, a consultancy that helps consumers understand their health care service options and costs. "Even without a serious illness, the cumulative effect of out-of-pocket spending on coinsurance and uncovered expenses can quickly amount to thousands and put pressure on your retirement income stream."

Average annual out-of-pocket health care costs after Medicare

What you pay for health care in retirement can vary widely based on your age, income, health status and the choice of plans in your state. These average annual costs for individuals in moderately good health can give you a good starting point for planning.

---

For individuals with Medicare

| Age 65 | $5,923 |
| Age 70 | $6,498 |
| Age 75 | $7,098 |

Source: Estimates provided by HealthView based on historical insurance data and actuarial projections, as of 2015. Includes premiums for Medicare Parts A, B, D and Medigap Plan premium. Includes vision, dental and hearing plus out-of-pocket costs for uncovered expenses and prescription costs. Assumes individual is in moderately good health.

The amount paid out of pocket for prescription costs not covered by plans is one of the most common "sinkholes" people fall into, says Votava. "Ninety to 95 percent of folks on Medicare overspend for their prescription drugs because various plans cover medications differently, and patients don’t always do their homework," she says. You also may have to deal with the so-called donut hole, where expenses up to about $3,700 are paid at about 75 percent, then from $3,700 to over $7,400 you pay a high portion of the cost yourself (the "donut hole") before returning to better coverage. "The donut hole is set to go away by 2020, but Medicare’s definition of ‘going away’ will leave the hole 25 percent open," cautions Votava.

Another unanticipated cost may be the extra premiums you’ll pay for Part B and Part D coverage if your income is above certain thresholds or if you enroll in Medicare before you begin taking Social Security. For example, the standard monthly premium for those who enroll for the first time in Part B in 2017 is $134.00. But if the modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) shown in your 2015 IRS tax return is above $85,000 for an individual or $170,000 for a married couple filing jointly, an Income Related Monthly Adjustment Amount (IRMAA) is added to your premium (see box, right).

If you have higher income, you will also have to pay an additional premium for Part D prescription drug coverage. For more information go to medicare.gov.

Medicare Part B premiums increase with income

If the income reported on your IRS tax return for the year 2015 goes above certain thresholds, your premiums for Part B coverage will be greater than those for most Medicare recipients.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>If your modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) in 2015 was ...</th>
<th>... and you enroll in Medicare in 2017</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>File individual tax return</td>
<td>File joint tax return</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>$85,000 or less</td>
<td>$170,000 or less</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>above $85,000 up to $107,000</td>
<td>above $170,000 up to $214,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>above $107,000 up to $160,000</td>
<td>above $214,000 up to $320,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>above $160,000 up to $214,000</td>
<td>above $320,000 up to $428,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>above $214,000</td>
<td>above $428,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: Medicare.gov.

*If you already pay your Medicare Part B premium through your monthly Social Security benefit, you’ll pay less ($109 on average). Social Security will tell you the exact amount you will pay for Part B in 2017. Please talk to your tax advisor or go to medicare.gov for more information.

What you can do now:

"You first need to understand the foundation that Medicare provides so you know what you need to save on your own," says Hunter. Take a look at the Average Annual Out-of-Pocket Health Care Costs After Medicare chart (see chart, top left) to get a sense of what your expenses might be, and think about factoring those costs into your retirement planning and investing goals. For more detailed information, visit medicare.gov.

Also, if you have a health condition that’s likely to persist when you get older, start now to get a better understanding of what your medications should cost so you can make a more informed comparison among available drug plans — today and in the future.
Step 2: Use all of your savings opportunities, from catch-up retirement contributions to a tax-free Health Savings Account (HSA).

Naturally, you want to take full advantage of contributing to your 401(k) and IRAs. If you are age 50 or older, you can use the catch-up provision to increase your contributions to your 401(k) and to your IRA for the 2017 tax year. And the sooner you increase your contributions, the longer your investments have to grow tax-deferred. If your cash flow makes these catch-ups difficult, consider the possibility that you may be living beyond your means.

You might also consider funding a Health Savings Account (HSA) on your own or at work, if your employer offers one. Created as part of the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act of 2003, HSAs are unique tax-advantaged savings vehicles that integrate health care spending and retirement saving. HSAs are only available with High-Deductible Health Plans (HDHPs) to help you save money to cover the higher deductibles and lower premiums that come with the HDHP option.

If your company offers an HDHP/HSA, you can have your employer make a contribution to the account directly from your paycheck before taxes. If you have an HSA on your own, you can make the contribution with after-tax dollars, then deduct the contributions you paid later when you file your annual federal income tax return. (For the 2017 tax year, the maximum individual contribution to an HSA is $3,400, or $4,400 if you are age 55 or older, and families can save up to $6,750, or $7,750 if you are age 55 or older.) That money has the potential to grow tax-deferred, and any amounts you take out to cover qualified health care expenses are federally tax-free.

Deciding whether the HDHP/HSA makes sense for you is “all about doing the math,” says Bob Kaiser, senior vice president, health benefit solutions, Bank of America Merrill Lynch. It also requires a shift in mindset. Rather than just checking into the hospital and assuming everything is being taken care of, an HDHP encourages you to become a cost-conscious consumer and a better health care shopper. It also helps you think longer term, Kaiser says, because you’re seeing what different procedures actually cost. “If you go to healthcarebluebook.com, for example, you can learn that an MRI can range from $600 to $3,000, depending on where you live,” he says.

What you can do now: Review your financial situation and your typical health care costs to consider whether the higher deductibles but lower premiums associated with the HDHP/HSA may be a good choice for you. “Even if you choose to stay with a more traditional health plan, the behaviors that health accounts encourage, like more closely monitoring your health care expenses and becoming a more cost-conscious consumer, can be advantageous,” Kaiser notes.

Step 3: Embrace healthy living — one of the best investments you can make today.

Taking care of yourself by practicing preventive care often results in lower future health care costs and greater independence in retirement. David Laster, head of retirement strategies, Merrill Lynch Wealth Management, equates staying healthy with human capital. “There’s an analogy that just as businesses invest in technology, people should invest in themselves through education and experience, putting ‘human capital’ on the asset side of the ledger,” Laster explains. “I’d argue that investing in your health so you function better is another key element of building human capital.”

The good news for those already pursuing a healthy lifestyle is that many preventive health care services are covered in full under the Affordable Care Act (ACA). For many, however, it’s not the cost but an inclination to focus on and care for others that stands in the way of healthy living. “You need to take care of yourself in a sustainable way,” says Laster. If you don’t do that, then you risk not being able to meet other people’s needs over the long term, he says. Or worse still, you may end up dependent on them.
Step 4: Find ways to address the major risks:

"It won’t happen to me“ isn’t enough.

Admit it. When you read that seven in 10 people will require long-term care (LTC) in their later years, you figure you’ll be among the lucky 30 percent who won’t need assistance with the activities of daily living, such as walking, eating, toileting or bathing.

And that’s understandable, says Laster, who sees great reluctance among consumers to deal with the prospect of getting older and more frail as they age. “A goal like college funding is fueled by dreams of a bright future for your kids. But buying LTC insurance is, well, dreary,” Laster says. “Even though buying an LTC insurance policy early in your 50s often means you’ll pay lower premium costs, most people don’t want to think about it — and so they don’t do it.” But failing to plan may limit your future care choices and place a burden on your spouse or other loved ones, he says.

That’s why Liersch suggests “reframing” the LTC insurance decision in the context of your values. “If you want to remain as independent as possible, think of buying that LTC policy as creating a situation where your children are also independent of needing to care for you,” he says.

It’s also important to understand that LTC insurance is not just for nursing homes but can cover in-home care and assisted living residences that are more appealing from a lifestyle perspective. Also, newer “hybrid policies,” which combine life insurance and LTC insurance, address consumers’ chief reservation: that they are investing in coverage they will never use. With one of these new hybrids, for example, you can invest $100,000 in an LTC policy that buys you a credit of perhaps $250,000 if you need care down the road. However, if you never need to use the money for LTC, it becomes a life insurance policy that later pays your heirs a tax-free benefit of $150,000. And, if you change your mind, you can get your initial investment back without interest.

“These hybrid policies are especially interesting in the current low-interest-rate environment,” notes Laster. “If you have cash sitting around earning nothing in the bank, this policy takes a risk off the table.”

Covering the costs of long-term care

The costs of long-term care can vary widely, depending on the type of care offered, where it’s provided and where you live.

Living in a state where health care services typically cost less could substantially reduce your expenses.

National median costs of care

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Nursing home (semiprivate room)</th>
<th>Assisted living facility</th>
<th>Home health aide</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Day</td>
<td>$225/day</td>
<td>$3,630/month</td>
<td>$20/hour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Year</td>
<td>$82,125/year</td>
<td>$43,540/year</td>
<td>$45,760/year</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: Genworth 2016 Cost of Care Survey.

Alternatively, you can simply plan to save ambitiously to cover LTC expenses. “Self-insuring is certainly an option, but realistically that’s extremely hard to do. The advantage of an LTC policy is that it will be there for you even if you might not have saved enough on your own,” Laster adds.

Another risk to manage is a late-career layoff or early retirement; you’ll need to purchase other health insurance to bridge the gap until Medicare kicks in at age 65. Today the premiums for this interim coverage average about $9,200 per year for people in their mid-50s to age 64. But you may want to check out all of your options because the actual premiums can vary widely among providers.
Step 5: Stay current with changes.

There’s no question that viewing your health care in a more strategic way will be complicated by the fact that our nation’s health care system is changing.

“Everything you thought you knew about health care is changing, and you need to reevaluate your situation and make new choices,” says Laura Grogan-O’Mara, director, legislative and public policy, Bank of America Merrill Lynch.

Because the ACA is an equivalent program in size and scope to Social Security or Medicare, Grogan-O’Mara underscores that it will be important to watch how states enact parts of the law and how access to health care changes. “It’s a new normal and we need to pay attention and educate ourselves to make smart choices so we have options as we move forward,” she says.

What you can do now: Stay on top of the changes in health care options available from your employer and your state’s health care marketplace. Visit the Kaiser Family Foundation website at kff.org, where you’ll find everything from health care policy analysis to helpful online tools. "The Kaiser Foundation is a nonprofit, nonpartisan leader in health policy analysis and a source I rely on," says Grogan-O’Mara.

There’s no time like the present.

If you figure you have plenty of time before you need to focus more closely on your own health care needs, Liersch has a final caution. “People can view themselves as years younger than their actual age,” he says, which is why you may want to be a little more realistic and start planning soon for your future costs.

Laster’s advice is more direct: “It’s never too early to start.”

For example:

- Some companies allow employees who retire early to continue their corporate health insurance plans. The companies charge premiums that are similar to what they were during employment.

- Most companies with at least 20 employees must offer an extension of benefits (up to 36 months) under COBRA, although this can be very expensive.

- The ACA health care marketplace could offer coverage that’s less expensive than COBRA. Also, under the ACA, people can’t be charged more because of preexisting conditions. You can check out the rates for the maximum out-of-pocket cost limit for any individual and family marketplace plan for 2017 at healthcare.gov.

What you can do now: Weigh the pros and cons of self-insuring versus purchasing LTC insurance or a new hybrid insurance policy with LTC included. To manage the cost, remember that “it’s not essential to cover the total projected expense all at once,” says Hunter. “Do what you can now and plan to add coverage, perhaps increasing your daily benefit, as you are able.”

If you have to retire before reaching Medicare eligibility at age 65, look into health care coverage through your state’s health insurance marketplace.
How Merrill Edge® can help

Merrill Edge® offers insights and resources to help you plan for health care expenses in retirement.

• To see how health care costs can affect your retirement savings goal, use the Retirement Evaluator™ on merrilledge.com (log-in required).

• For help with your retirement planning and health care saving choices at work, check with your employee benefits office.

• To learn more about planning for health care costs in retirement, visit these helpful sites:
  - medicare.gov for calculators to help you estimate future health care costs
  - GOODCARE.com for tools to help you manage health care expenses before and during retirement

Looking for more assistance with your retirement savings and investing strategy?

A Merrill Edge Financial Solutions Advisor™ can discuss how to factor health care costs into your retirement strategy and help you keep your plan on track. Visit locations.merrilledge.com to find a Merrill Edge Financial Solutions Advisor™ at a select financial center near you. Or call us at 888.ML.INVEST (888.654.6837), Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Eastern.

If you are not a Merrill Edge client, please call 888.MER.EDGE (888.637.3343) to learn more and get started.

Investing in securities involves risks, and there is always the potential of losing money when you invest in securities.

This material should be regarded as educational information on Medicare and healthcare costs and is not intended to provide specific healthcare advice. If you have questions regarding your particular situation, please contact your healthcare, legal or tax advisor.

Merrill Lynch and its affiliates do not monitor or maintain the information available on the external websites mentioned nor do they represent or guarantee that such websites are accurate or complete, and they should not be relied upon as such.

All guarantees and benefits of the insurance policy are backed by the claims-paying ability of the issuing insurance company. They are not backed by Merrill Lynch or its affiliates, nor do Merrill Lynch or its affiliates make any representations or guarantees regarding the claims-paying ability of the issuing insurance company.

Long-term care insurance coverage contains benefits, exclusions, limitations, eligibility requirements and specific terms and conditions under which the insurance coverage may be continued in force or discontinued. Not all insurance policies and types of coverage may be available in your state.

GWM Investment Management & Guidance (IMG) provides industry-leading investment solutions, portfolio construction advice and wealth management guidance.

This information should not be construed as investment advice. It is presented for information purposes only and is not intended to be either a specific offer by any Merrill Lynch entity to sell or provide, or a specific invitation for a consumer to apply for, any particular retail financial product or service that may be available through the Merrill Lynch family of companies.

Neither Merrill Lynch nor any of its affiliates or financial advisors provide legal, tax or accounting advice. You should consult your legal and/or tax advisors before making any financial decisions.

© 2016 Bank of America Corporation. All rights reserved. | ARFVMSB8 | WP-11-16-0347 | 00-66-0552B | 12/2016

---

1 Health and Retirement: Planning for the Great Unknown, Merrill Lynch and Age Wave, May 2014.
3 Healthcare costs in retirement: Preparing today to help protect your wealth tomorrow, Merrill Lynch, 2014.
5 Genworth 2016 Cost of Care Survey.
6 Estimate provided by HealthView based on historical insurance data, October 2016.